- Such a tyrannical future where property rights would be ignored, where a massive standing army would lurk unchangeable, where Congressmen would hold office for life, where ruinous treaties would be commonplace, where Presidential powers would make Nero jealous, where gold and silver would vanish from circulation to be replaced by the worthless "notes" of a private banking conglomeration, where the States would be reduced to mere administrative departments of the feds, and where the grasp of taxation would actually reach into the common laborer's paycheck - all this was too fantastic to be even theoretically contemplated during the ratification debates - Kenneth W. Royce (Hologram of Liberty)

- All you know about the Constitution is what you have been told and what you have been told is all wrong. Government is broken and can't be fixed because no one knows what the government law that put it together really is. We can all agree that unconstitutional laws are void—what can be done with an unconstitutional Constitution?

- The legislative power of Congress is limited to Washington, D. C., federal territory and the possessions of the United States of America.

- The Declaration of Independence only frees those who are not on territory owned by and ceded to the United States of America.

- The State Conventions that ratified "this Constitution" had no legislative power to confer on a Government of the United States. These States merely recognized the proprietary power of the United States of America over its territory and other property

- Article VII of that Constitution provides that only nine States need to ratify "this Constitution" in order to establish it among those States. This means that establishment of "this Constitution" by the States does not supersede and replace the Articles of Confederation of November 15, 1777, as is popularly believed by the historians and attorneys and judges in the legal profession. Repeal of the Articles of Confederation would require all thirteen States to act to end the Confederacy.

- By the time all thirteen States had ratified "this Constitution," no one was aware that the First Congress had substituted a statutory oath for the Article VI oath, which current law and "this Constitution" required to be subscribed to be valid. This First Congress enacted the Judiciary Act of 1789 on September 24th, which created by legislation, what would pass for real Article III courts, which could only be created by a Congress bound by an Article VI oath. The judges of these courts could only be nominated and appointed by a President who was bound by an Article VI oath. The first federal Justices and judges were nominated and appointed by George Washington, who took an oral oath as President of the United States and no oath as President of the United States of America.

  - On September 17, 1787 twelve State delegates approved the Constitution for the united States of America, and the States became the Constitutors. What is the legal definition of the term, "constitutor?" A Constitutor: In the civil law, one who, by simple agreement, becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt. (Blacks Law Dictionary 6th Ed.) The States were now liable for the United States debt owed to the King of England, but the people of America were not yet liable, because they were not a party to the Constitution since it was never put to them for a vote. On August 4, 1790 an Act was passed that, for all intents and purposes abolished the States and created Federal Districts. In this Act each District was assigned a portion of the debt. Then the states reorganized their governments, which had to be done because the States needed to "legally" (under men's laws) transfer the bonded obligation for debt repayment from the states to the people. The original State Constitutions were never submitted to the people for a vote, so the governments wrote new constitutions and submitted them to the people for a vote, thereby binding the people to the debts owed to Great Britain. Once again, deception is used to get the people to unknowingly volunteer into bondage.

Here is the shocking truth about the American constitution, and it is the unkindest cut of all. After spending all that time, effort, and resources attempting to secure your rights and freedoms under the man-made constitution, the bottom line at the end of the day is: YOU ARE NOT EVEN A PARTY TO THE CONSTITUTION! It is a contract between: the States, the founders (through their insider legal establishments of those incorporated States), and the king of England. The constitution itself was not signed by any human, it was only signed "In witness" on behalf of the States. Since you are not a party to that contract, then you can't possibly have ANY rights under that contract. This, and ALL constitutions are just part of the elaborate .....
